

CALL FOR PAPER – BRAZILIAN JOURNALISM RESEARCH – BJR

Volume 6, number 2, 2010

Diversity of journalism research works: multiple perspectives, possible dialogues

This edition of BJR is devoted to the diversity of approaches to journalism as a subject for study and a social practice, from a critical and analytical perspective. Articles which will be of interest for this edition are those that seek to question and go deeply into theoretical issues, show the results of empirical research works and establish dialogues with other areas of knowledge capable of contributing to the comprehension of the discipline's singularities and of the contemporary professional practice of journalism. This edition intends to bring together works which can express critical thought regarding different forms of management, production, circulation and consumption of information, taking into consideration the impact of technologies on the production routines, the hybridization of styles and languages in the construction of narratives and the current reconfigurations of journalistic mediation.

Brazilian Journalism Research – BJR – has had a Portuguese version since the second semester of 2008.

Authors should send the articles in two versions (English and Portuguese). BJR is a semiannual scientific magazine of the SBPJor – Brazilian Association of Journalism Researchers. For more information regarding the SBPJor, visit our site (www.sbpjor.org.br).

Articles: They should be originals in English and Portuguese. The authors should send them in accordance with the magazine's system to the following electronic addresses: beatrizbecker@uol.com.br, tattianat@gmail.com, and fernandoresende1501@gmail.com.

Each one of the two versions of the article (English and Portuguese) should have around 7 thousand words and should be typed in double space. Send a separate page with the title of the article and the author's name and identification.

Each article should contain:

On a separate page, write the title, subtitle and the complete name of the author(s) with the current residential and electronic addresses.

- Send an abstract with 100-150 words and five key words.
- Send on a separate page a biographical note with up to five lines.
- The article should contain 7 thousand words, with introduction and section titles in italics which should not be numbered.
- Notes should be placed at the end, before the bibliographic references.
- The references and the notes should be mentioned in the text (author, date, page).
- Charts, figures, photos and illustrations should be of good quality, consecutively numbered and clearly identified.

Copyright permissions: the authors are responsible for obtaining copyright permissions for reproducing any quotation, illustration or photograph previously published in another place.

Book reviews: the magazine includes a section of reviews of books concerning journalism and related areas with up to 1,000 words. Please send comments regarding books to Célia Ladeira (cmmota@terra.com.br).
